Do you want to explore contemporary artistic practices that use video, digital imaging and design, photography, animation and media?

Digital Media Studies gives you the opportunity to investigate and create digital media presentations within visual arts and design, television, film and video.

You will investigate how these fields of artistic practice have adapted and evolved over the Twentieth Century and strengthen your abilities to represent ideas and interests using digital media.

You will also learn about production and editing techniques, sound engineering, special effects, advertising techniques and promotion. You will have creative choice in your projects based on your areas of interest. Projects may include parody infomercials, visual design products (such as logos, posters), short films for festivals, holographic and virtual realities, music film clips and stop motion animation.

You will also have the opportunity to participate in the school's Digital Media Crew, giving you real world experiences such as recording school events using both photography and filming.
